Excerpt from The Square to Square Swing

I was born in Bozeman, Montana, a town of about 30,000 people nestled in the Rocky Mountains. My parents were both teachers, and we lived in a modest house on the edge of town. I spent my childhood exploring the mountains and rivers around Bozeman, and I developed a deep love for the American landscape.

When I was 18 years old, I left Montana to attend college in the East. I spent the next four years living in New York City, and I was exposed to a whole new world of culture and ideas. But I never forgot my roots, and I always longed to return to the West.

After college, I moved back to Montana and began working as a journalist. I spent the next several years traveling the country, writing about the people and places that I encountered. My travels took me from the Appalachian Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Circle.

Through my travels, I came to appreciate the diversity and beauty of the American landscape. I also came to understand the challenges that the country faces, from environmental degradation to economic inequality. But despite these challenges, I believe that the American landscape is a source of hope and inspiration.

In The Square to Square Swing, I share my experiences traveling the country and exploring the American landscape. I hope that my book will inspire readers to appreciate the beauty and diversity of the country, and to work together to protect it for future generations.
