The couple spent months planning and preparing for their expedition. They gathered supplies, trained for the extreme cold, and consulted with experts on how to survive in such a hostile environment. In November 2016, they set off from Union Glacier, Antarctica, on their skis.

The journey was grueling. The couple faced whiteout conditions, sub-zero temperatures, and treacherous crevasses. They also had to contend with the physical and mental challenges of skiing for hours on end. But through it all, they remained determined to reach their goal.

After 45 days and 1,100 miles, Will and Sarah Evans reached the South Pole. They were the first British couple to ski to the pole without any outside support. Their achievement was a testament to their strength, courage, and determination.

The Book

Two Parents Risk Life And Family In An Extraordinary Quest To The South Pole is more than just a travelogue. It is a story of human perseverance and the unbreakable bond of family. Will and Sarah Evans share their personal experiences, their fears and doubts, and their triumphs. They also offer insights into the challenges of parenting young children while pursuing their dreams.

The book is beautifully written and illustrated with stunning photography. It is a captivating read that will inspire and motivate readers of all ages.
